Class Action Litigation

Overview

Day Pitney recognizes that class actions provide a significant threat to a business. Class actions can be expensive and complex, placing your business at risk and marring its reputation. A strong defense is paramount. Class action litigation requires experience and a unified, effective team effort.

We have served as national, regional, and trial counsel and regularly represent manufacturers, distributors, retailers, lessors, and governmental entities facing allegations of injury and loss related to products and services including: agricultural equipment; asbestos, chemicals and groundwater contamination; automobiles, trucks, and aircraft; outdoor power equipment and power tools; computers; food products; alcohol and tobacco; fire and safety equipment; healthcare, medical devices and pharmaceuticals; industrial and construction equipment; and a wide spectrum of consumer products.

We offer an interdisciplinary approach that effortlessly combines the procedural skills of our litigators with the practical understanding and regulatory knowledge of practice-specific teams to provide wide-ranging service in all areas of class action litigation. Our bench includes former Assistant U.S. Attorneys and assistant state district attorneys. These attorneys offer valuable insights shaped while enforcing the laws and statutes that form the basis for the class claims our clients face.

Our commitment to effective, efficient service means providing a comprehensive support structure, with the latest technology, that enables us to reduce costs. We also staff matters appropriately. We routinely staff matters lean and we feel this sets Day Pitney apart from most firms.
